It's not just the only, final-four appearance for the school, but they have a chance to do what it would take to get a school its first national championship, beating Kansas on Sunday. Unfortunately, even with Trae Young's historic first-half performance against the Jayhawks, the Wildcats might not be able to pull it off. Trae Young: The most efficient scorer in NCAA Tournament history MORE: Trae Young's greatness is reason to believe No. 1 seed Wildcats could win title In doing so, though, Young makes a mockery of the five-game limit to try and get into the Final Four. Kansas, after all, is a great competitor and has multiple first-round victories under coach Bill Self. He could help the Wildcat's cause by beating his old school, North Carolina, in the Elite Eight. But no matter what happens, Trae Young should be considered the true individual national player of the tournament. While we all remember his game against Deandre Ayton, it's
