Q: In Ruby on Rails how to return a default value if an attribute is not set? In Rails I have a method to generate a password hash for a user. Currently the method will take the user's password, the algorithm and return the hashed value. That's a simple method and works fine... However, it relies on an attributes to be set. How can I return a default value in this method? This is the code I have:

def
generate_password_hash(password, algorithm) user_password = password.upcase new_password = " new_hash = " if user_password.length == 0
Or whatever you want to do in case the user isn't set new_hash =

'abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890'
end # The algorithm to hash the password case algorithm when 'bcrypt' # Force the algorithm begin hash = BCrypt::Password.create(password, BCrypt::Engine.new(algorithm)) new_hash = hash.to_s end when 'MD5' # Use whatever has the user_password value if you're not using default 'bcrypt' begin hash = Digest::MD5.new hash.update(user_password) new_hash =
hash.hexdigest end when 'sha1' # Use whatever has the user_password value if you're not using default 'bcrypt' begin hash = Digest::SHA1.new
hash.update(user_password) new_hash =
hash.hexdigest end when 'sha256' # Use
whatever has the user_password value if

Pages Monday, July 24, 2008 Let Them Eat Cake! Gorgonzola is a cheese that I have pretty much never eaten, not sure why, I guess I just thought it sounded quite bland. While shopping around I came across it in the cheese department of a European food market, and tried it. And what a wonderful surprise. It was quite a bit drier than most cheeses, and a bit more pungent with that sharp, but tasty taste. The flavors are quite reminiscent of blue cheese, and would make a wonderful addition to a salad or sandwich, or to pass as dip for chicken or ziti pasta. I really enjoy using ingredients from my garden in a cheese. It's a way of reconnecting with the land and the earth. As I was walking through the market on Sunday

I ran into four tomatoes ripe for picking, sweet and ripe. I thought the cheese was a perfect way to dress up a locally grown tomato. I mixed the gorgonzola with a spicy Italian cheese that I had in my fridge - Provolone. The aioli on the other hand was flavored with chives, garlic and a little cheese. It made a great combination, and was perfect on a summer's day. This week I made a whole bunch of muffins, mostly because I had lots of apples on hand and was hoping to make applesauce. So, as I was making the batter I pulled the cheese out of the fridge. And I decided to use it. I placed the gorgonzola on top of the batter, and then poured the batter into the muffin cups. A beautifully flavored muffin, that takes a humble, unassuming piece of cheese and makes it into a spectacular dessert! I like all the uses that I find for gorgonzola and think it is a cheese I would enjoy more in the future. M. Khanna told The Associated Press on Friday that the raids at the restaurants were based on the department's "statistical analysis" of a spike in the number of domestic violence incidents involving Indian women over the past two years in Concord and also in nearby Chelmsford. "One of the things that prompted us to open this investigation was an information that Indian women were being the subject of domestic violence by her husband and also the couple frequented these restaurants," Khanna said. The department will initially bring charges against Khanna, 20, and his girlfriend,
