Food stuff containers are known. Examples of known food stuff containers include beverage cups such as coffee cups, tea cups, and so on. Typically, containers have a lid that is disposed over an opening in the container. However, in some situations it is desirable to not have a lid in the opening. For example, it may be desirable to remove or identify the contents of the container without having to remove and/or open a lid. It would be desirable to provide food stuff containers and methods of forming same, such as beverage cups, that facilitate removal or identification of contents without the need to remove and/or open a lid. It would also be desirable to provide a container that is capable of being manufactured by a technique that may be suitable for packaging other food stuff or other materials as well as containers with no such capability.
