In dealing with the problem of air quality in areas where toxic substances are generated, a great deal of attention has been focused on apparatus for detoxifying or filtering gas streams to remove pollutants therefrom. Because the size of such apparatus is often limited by reasons of cost, space and power consumption, it is highly desirable to combine several functions into a single structure. More particularly, there has arisen the need to be able to provide air, especially that used in hospitals, industrial and other environments, for several purposes and in several specific ways. For example, it is often useful to supply air that has been pre-conditioned or "cleaned" of a substantial portion of the air contaminants in the air, so that the air can be used

I'm using Storage emulator (c:\temp\myProject\project.esproj) to test our storage contract library. The storage contract library works fine, but when we try to open files from Azure Storage emulator (s3://myproject/folder/file.txt), we get "Invalid Signature" error. Some context of our solution: We use the IStorageEmulatorClient to open and read S3 files. We use the StorageEmulator to create storage contract folder (s3://myproject) with all the files (folder and file.txt) I've tried to import the S3.SignedUrlCredentiaProvider through StorageEmulatorClient. Is there any way to read the S3 error from IStorageEmulatorClient object? Thanks! A: We are using the same approach to test out the Azure storage client libraries for c#. We are using the StorageEmulator project to build the bucket and then just send the s3 url. I have looked at this link and I got something we are using to see if I have a file or not: IEmulatorFile file = service.GetBlobReference(emulator_file_name).GetBlob(); if (file != null) { string fileName = file.Name; Stream stream = file.Open(); byte[] content = new byte[stream.Length]; Icb139a0ed
