Q: Flash 8 on Mac OS X 10.4.11? I can't seem to get my Flash 8 application to work on Mac OS X 10.4.11 (Tiger). I always get the blank grey screen I've come to expect when Flash is used. Does any one have any information on it? How did it get there? I did run out of luck trying out a Windows XP VM to use the Macromedia Flash 8 SDK without paying. What are you using to get it to work? A: I would think that you are not the only one. You are a member of someone's group, but you can't see the group - it's invisible, you can't see who belongs to it, and only the moderator of the group is allowed to see and monitor it. This is OK for some things, but not for others. We've all heard about people who create discussion groups on various social networks with the intention of being a safe place to discuss a variety of topics anonymously - groups for abuse survivors, for example. No one would think of allowing a member to join such a group, however, because we all know how too abusive, too hurtful, or too any of a dozen reasons that some members in these groups (especially in the event that there are children) can be. There's a list of rules on the Web for acceptable behaviour in groups, but it's not really enforced. To a certain extent, we use groups to discuss things anonymously (e.g. the group for dorks I keep on LinkedIn), and we expect members of those groups to follow those rules. As a result, despite the rules, the anonymous groups end up being nothing but a place to talk about whatever you want to talk about - that is, unless you don't follow the rules. I know of a couple of other options for creating a "group" ♦
