What Is ABA and Why Is It Needed? ABA is an acronym of applied behavioral analysis which is used as a developmental science and an effective tool to help those affected by developmental delays, ASD, ADD, ADHD, specific learning disabilities and other related disorders. It uses a scientific approach to identify a person's potentials, strengths and weaknesses to achieve personal goals. Applied Behavior Analysis (ABA) is a teaching method that is used to teach children with disabilities. Many families use it to teach their children with special needs. It will also help families who are raising a child with a developmental disability. ABA allows professionals, like speech pathologists, psychologists, neurologists, and parents to work together to put together a personalized program for a child with special needs. They will take into consideration what he is capable of and do not
