Air Quality Management Area Reviews The Air Quality Management Area program is an important part of meeting the National Ambient Air Quality Standards (NAAQS) and federal and state requirements. The specific legal requirements for each regulated pollutant (acid, asbestos, lead, mercury, sulfur dioxide, nitrogen oxide, ozone, particulate matter) are found on the Agency for Toxic Substances and Disease Registry (ATSDR) website. The two most significant pollutants regulated in the Commonwealth are ozone and particulate matter. Particulate matter and ozone are different pollutants; some areas need to address both pollution while other areas only need to address particulate matter. Both ozone and particulate matter have serious health effects and thus must be controlled. The Salt River Project (SRP) Public Service District has been identified by the Agency for Toxic Substances and Disease Registry (ATSDR) as a federal Superfund Site and has been required to set an Ambient Air Quality Standard (AAQS) for ozone since March 1992. The relationship between the plasticity index and the physical properties of aged rice varieties. The plasticity index (PI) is an important parameter to evaluate the stability of genetic material of rice breeding materials in local environments. Rice materials were grown in the experimental field of Beijing Agriculture University in 2002 and 2003. The relationships between the PI and physical properties of rice seedlings, such as plant height, grain length, grain width, number of effective awns, number of grains per spike, 100-grain weight, spikelet number, thousand-grain weight and spikelet number per panicle, were investigated. The results showed that the length of first internode, second internode and ear length of rice varieties had positive correlation with PI. The width of the scutellum, width of the midrib and thickness of the rachis of rice varieties had negative correlation with PI. In addition, high PI varieties had higher number of grains per spike and 1000-grain weight than low PI varieties. The above results suggested that the plasticity of different traits in rice was different, and the stability of rice materials on the basis of grain was better than that of its other parts. A year and a half ago, an FBI agent was killed and another agent wounded when a Boston Marathon bomber crashed a stolen car into their vehicle. Now a federal appeals court has ruled that a publicly-filed terrorism-related indictment of the suspects can be sealed, ending hopes that the identities of the suspects could be made public. The FBI asked a court to seal "a substantial portion" of the indictment, filed in Boston, surrounding the 2013 incident in which Tamerlan Tsarnaev was killed and his brother killed a police officer after the brothers stole a car, and were both wounded after a car chase, leading to a shootout with police. ADVERTISEMENT According to WBUR, "The bureau said in court papers that disclosing the identities of the suspects could undermine the safety of those involved in the investigation" and could "disrupt the investigation or compromise the safety of law enforcement agents and potential witnesses." "The government claims it will be harmed if the defendants are publicly identified," the court ruled, "we find that harm does not outweigh the public's interest in the information in this case." The ruling was issued by the 1st US Circuit Court of Appeals in Boston on Tuesday. When the docket of the case was first released, it showed that the name of one of the Tsarnaev brothers was redacted. However, the
