Q: How to determine if a web part within webpart page has been added to a page programmatically? How can I determine whether a web part has been added to the page and if it has been added I want to update the state of the web part control so as to display the specified message. A: To determine if the web part is in the page, use the FindControl method on the web part itself. It uses ClientIDMode to determine the containing control of the web part; you can use this information to check if the web part has been added to the page. WebPart wp = WebPartControl.FindControl("webPartID") as WebPart; if (wp != null && wp.State == WebPartState.Normal) {

Sordum Random Password Generator is a utility that can generate passwords of different lengths, including your birthday, your favorite color, your location, your name, professional information, your hobbies, any common word and even random passwords. Create strong random passwords for any purpose Sordum Random Password Generator is a combination of several technologies that make it truly unique. When you press the Generate button, Sordum Random Password

Generator first uses an advanced algorithm for real-time random character generation. Based on that generated string, a second algorithm generates a different yet strong password for each passkey. Any information you input into your passkey field must be a valid value for that particular algorithm. If you don't know your birthday, your favorite color or the city you live in, we'll help you find a random password that meets all the requirements. Create a personal password vault Many password-manager applications are prone to storing your passkeys in a database or file format. Since all your passkeys are generated by random algorithms, you lose a good amount of security. Sordum Random Password Generator stores every single generated passkey right in your password vault. That way you're sure no information is being stored in a database or file format. Sordum Random Password Generator stores your passkeys in your password vault
