Jun 23, 2013 I will be sure to bookmark it and return here. I play each year's FIFA and PES demos for many hours each, agonising over their merits and differences. Jun 22, 2013 Ce finderez-vous ici: A: Why you call this pas? pas means that the image have not alt text (language, place, etc). You call some words with a period? like acronyms or full name? And your photo have such kind of english sentence or title? It's not illegal, but noone will read it (most of the people use google translate to read it) Q: Need to create an auto update application for a database that I will be hosting myself For my application, I need to create an auto update application that will be hosted on a web site of mine. I will be hosting this application on my website. Basically, I would like to create a SQL database, fill it with some data (for a game), and then have a simple PHP script that will check if there is a new update for the database at the web site and, if so, download the new data, overwrite the old and then deploy the new version of the database. This way, I will not have to worry about the user email address or password etc, as I will be hosting the application on my web site and the user will simply download the latest version of the application (if there is a new update) via a direct link from my website. My question is: How do I make the update application download the new version of the database on my web site? I don't need to know how to code the auto update application, the simple implementation that I have described would be fine. I am assuming that someone else has already done this and it is all documented somewhere but, as I haven't found anything, I am asking for help. Thanks. A: I assume you have the existing database somewhere else. This will basically be a function that takes the existing database from the web site and overwrite it with your new version. The real trick is how to keep the data synced between
