In this post, I will discuss how you can start your brainstorming session with the problem definition document. Identify the problem. Today's organization has given organizations' web sites a lot of importance. To help your organization and customer get online, the organization has invested a lot in the organization's own website as well as the customer's site. A website is not a site that's only for the organization's in-house work, but it must include the online presence of the organization as well as the customer's. When a website is not functioning properly, it leads to losses in the organization's product and service. A dysfunctional website will turn a loyal customer to someone else in a second. I consider a dysfunctional website to be one that doesn't give the customer what she or he needs from the website. How can you make sure your website is working properly? It's rather simple – you can actually make sure that your website is working properly by going through your next quarter's problem definition document. Your problem definition document should be done before the start of next quarter so that you have enough time to make sure that the problem statement from your problem statement document is adhered to and you have enough time to make sure that the statement itself is optimized. Suppose you are a financial organization. When customers go online to your website to find out the costs
