The after-effects of speech errors in rapid serial visual presentation tasks. Speech errors on rapid serial visual presentation (RSVP) tasks (i.e., omissions and additions of speech) are examined to examine how they affect the processing of subsequent visual information. Three experiments examined the effects of perceptual errors and memory errors on subsequent visual target identification. Experiment 1 showed that a negative after-effect occurs when the subject misses the target speech, and the presence of the target speech reduces this negative after-effect. These findings show that perceptual errors are not corrected in a simple decision task. In Experiment 2, a similar result was obtained when the omissions of the target speech were accompanied by memory errors. This result shows that the presence of the target speech is essential for avoiding a negative after-effect. In Experiment 3, perceptual errors were reduced when there was a memory error. This shows that perceptual errors are corrected when there is a memory error. A theoretical account of how speech errors are processed is discussed.Q: mysql server won't start (process 5029.exe) I have a problem with mysql server.
