Used with permission of the Liquid Fuels Supply Association (LFSA). 10.6.3 Dry Air There are numerous dry air devices on the market that rely upon breathing circuits as a source of air supply. The most common form of dry air intake is the pneumatically-powered device that draws air through a hollow-stem tube or hose. The air flows through a carbon dioxide scrubber, which removes the carbon dioxide. The dry air then flows into the breathing circuit. Dry air devices may be used for a variety of purposes. These may include: • Application that require breathing circuits, for example, fire-fighting, welding, or mining. • Application in which there is no need for breathing circuits, for example, shipboard operations or medical applications. 10.6.4 Ambient Air Ambient air air systems are generally utilized where there is a need for air for a wide variety of tasks, such as when an air conditioning system provides air to both comfort cooling and heating components and ambient air is required for heating or cooling other spaces. Ambient air air systems may be classified in three categories: • Ambient air with fresh air. • Ambient air with recirculated air. • d0c515b9f4
