But for some reason, the CSS won't apply to IE9 or lower, nor will it correctly apply to IE10. But what I'm asking is, how can I make sure it won't apply to those versions of IE? Login Here .login-header { padding-top: 30px; text-align: center; padding-left: 0px; margin-left: 0px; margin-bottom: 0px; } A: IE 9 doesn't support :first-child ie 9 doesn't support child selector in css check this link : you need to use single line style .login-header h2{ padding-top: 30px; text-align: center; padding-left: 0px; margin-left: 0px; margin-bottom: 0px; } Q: Is it a bad idea to use glm.glm() after a NULL value in R? I'm trying to identify the top three neighborhoods in a certain neighborhood, and my response is a dataset with three variables: neighborhood, urban, and the number of books per neighborhood. The number of books in my dataset are constrained to be positive. My goal is to identify the most congested neighborhood in each urban area. So, I want to check if a neighborhood has a certain urban, and if so, I want to check if there are books left in the neighborhood. If not, I want to change the urban area to be 1. So far, I can identify the number of books per neighborhood if it's not 0. I can identify the top 3 urban areas if the urban column is not null. However, I'm not sure how to identify the top 3 urban e79caf774b
