What's new:

Hunt For Gods is a single-player, voxel strategy/RPG title, designed by Tommy Refenes. It was released in July 2010 for Xbox Live Arcade and Windows via Steam and the game was later ported to Mac and Linux. The game was published by the developer by Spry Fox, but Tommy Refenes later left Spry Fox and the title was eventually bought by Electronic Arts. Gameplay Hunt For Gods is a single-player, voxel strategy/RPG title, designed by Tommy Refenes. The player must also consider a second player mode, and use the second control scheme if there is a second player. Hunt For Gods can be played with keyboard or gamepad controls. The game is set up in a voxel-based, isometric game world where the player begins with no items and some coins and must later build the city walls. It is a single-player game, and in most cases the player must make all their decisions by themselves (except the enemy AI). The player is typically tasked with building a city from the ground up, to fortify against the hostile and potentially warring cities from other players. There are several modes of play, including campaign mode with story based levels (the "Assault" mode is an episodic campaign) and survival mode where the player is scored based on economy and it is based on "survival" as well as creating a city with the highest score of all players in a given difficulty setting. The player earns experience points (E.P.) throughout the game, which then unlock various achievements. Completing all of these unlocks the "Forbidden One" achievement. Through use of character/nation-based progression system the player can gain various abilities, items and substances for their city. Depending on the difficulty level, city size, available resources (such as wood, stone, gold and silver), and so forth, a city can have power of 5 to 95 depending on the size of the city and the type of game mode (campaign or survival). To avoid the game crashing, the maps have an "erase" button that can be used to clear out the map of players who quit while their cities are still in play, and players can submit up to 18 cities at the same time. Intro "Doom heretic," the voice starts out saying, "Behold your doom!" and goes on to explain "You once walked the pilgrim's path, but a gate awaits
