What's new in Maze Of Acheron:

The or Mara (Ἀρά), according to the Peripatetics, is a year in which the Day of Judgment is brought about. This is "the day on which the future world will be wiped out so that only the past will survive." It is mentioned in Plato's Phaedo, and in Aristotle's Rhetoric (where the term ἔγγραμμα means "revelation or apocalypse"). Greek word for year The name "Acheron" ( ) is ancient Greek for "stream" or "river." The etymology is uncertain but see Acherusia (Ἀκέρος/Ἀκέρος). The meaning of ἔγγραμμα ("revelation" or "apocalypse") in Aristotle's Rhetoric is uncertain. Post-Christian interpretation St. Bonaventure argued that in the cycle of the seven sacraments, "Acheron" refers to the blood sacrifice of the Last Supper. John Meyendorff argues that for the period between the 4th century and the Reformation, Acheron became a symbol of occulted or fettered (eschatologically) revelation ("Apokalupsis") that existed in the days before systematic confessional revelation. But Meyendorff writes that: "The full range of meanings of the word undoubtedly include those deep and rich suggestions of horror, death, and exile as part of its literal significance, as well as vague and ambiguous symbols linked to the ancient ideas of ruin and catastrophe. In the Delphic oracle it means the swallowing up of revelation, the end of all revealed truth, the end of life." He argues that St. Bonaventure's interpretation was confounded by attempts by 12th-century monks to explain Apokalupsis as a literal fall of man. For these commentators, "Acheron had the same meaning as the abyss of hell", i.e., the physical world had to be made comprehensible on the physical plane, which in practice meant accepting a gross, materialistic interpretation of the rational world, the intelligible world of ideas, and purely rational discourse. Thus, Acheron meant the rejection of rational discourse, rationalization, and rational claims to eternal life. It had a social, apocalyptic connotation, as opposed to the more mundane and profitable social purpose of the symposium.
