A saliva from a patient undergoing parotid surgery was fractionated on Sephadex G-50 column, the fraction that showed an enhancement of amylase release from pancreatic acini was investigated by gel filtration and ion exchange chromatography. The active fraction contained peptides and a low molecular weight compound having a molecular weight of less than 1,000. This compound was potent to stimulate amylase release from isolated pancreatic acini. The compound was released from parotid saliva of human volunteers after stimulation by chewing. These results suggest that a low molecular weight substance present in human saliva may be an endogenous secretagogue of the pancreas. Q: How do I change my time zone to Pacific Standard Time? I'm an Australian user with a Windows PC, and my system clock displays the wrong time. How do I change my Windows PC to use the correct time? I have read this question, but it's for Ubuntu. I'm using Windows 8.1 Pro A: Alternatively, you can fix the Windows Time Zone settings by going to Time and Date, selecting Change time zone, scrolling to Pacific time and clicking on Change. If you're happy with your current choice and want to remove all traces of the change, select Reset. A: Use the Time Zone Editor in Windows 8.1: Then adjust your time zone as needed. the blue-shifted component results from the weaker charge-exchange recombination process. A similar pattern is also obtained for a non-resonant excitation. The rate of the red-shifted component increases with increasing pump pulse intensity. We speculate that for a given pump pulse intensity, the red component is produced mainly by the red-shifted component, with a negligible contribution from the blue-shifted component. Finally, we show in Fig.  the pulse-to-pulse conversion efficiency. The efficiency shows a maximum value of  $\sim 0.23$ , at an excitation intensity of 25 mJ/cm<sup>2</sup>
