China's devastating economic slowdown is creating a new set of headaches for U.S. businesses, with the world's second largest economy showing few signs of a swift rebound. U.S. companies seeking to expand their operations in China are reporting that the vast infrastructure of the nation's 21 cities is in disarray, with investment in dozens of major projects having been frozen for months. A spate of small and mid-sized factories -- once seen as "the backbone" of China's economic miracle -- have been closing at a rate of one a day, according to a Journal of Commerce survey of U.S. businesses in China. Manufacturers are defecting to the United States, while 30,000 workers are losing their jobs every month in the nation's east coast boomtowns, said the survey. "After the flash of the real-estate and construction boom, we're seeing a new reality emerging," said Stephen Chen, a partner at KPMG in Shanghai. "In the real economy, China has already entered a recession." Chinese President Hu Jintao, known as a macro-management expert, has only compounded the turmoil with his recent effort to lift home and vehicle taxes. When the decision was announced late on Oct. 1, the average price of a home in Shanghai soared by more than 10% in the following two days, and the overnight Shanghai Composite Index dropped by nearly 6%, its worst weekly bff6bb2d33

Copyright© VOG All rights reserved.Q: How to extend something in a specific area of the screen I'm using the latest version of pygame. I have an application (not a game) where I need to draw a surface whenever some conditions are met. The problem is that the conditions are different in different parts of the screen, so I can't apply the drawing code to the whole screen. How can I solve this? I'm using the turtle library, but that's not an option. A: I don't know what you mean by a "surface". In pygame, everything is a Surface, and you'll probably want to adapt the usual drawing code for moving and drawing the pixels. If your "condition" is really different, I suggest you model the "region" of the screen where the condition is true, and not the condition itself. That way, it will be easy to draw, depending on your algorithm, in any part of the screen. As a quick example, let's say that we want to draw a line to another point where the color is red. The following code will draw the line in any region whose color is red: import pygame import random RED = (255, 0, 0) # These constants will
