I have no idea how to remove them so I can upgrade the rest of my computer to Arch. Thank you in advance for the help. A: Run the following command: xargs --delete --no-run-if-empty sudo apt install Note: Though I have not tested this myself I'm assuming apt won't install a package name that's already installed unless you remove the package first. This should allow you to install the base packages in their correct configurations and then they'll be removed after you've successfully installed them with no issues. If you're not familiar with xargs, here is a basic introduction. This is part of a little shell script I wrote to get around the bug in Ubuntu where apt fails to upgrade a LTS version to a non LTS version of Ubuntu. Basically it does: Upgrade to the newest Ubuntu base version Install packages using apt Remove the packages installed above Remove packages to LTS version Upgrade to Arch Linux (do this with pacstrap or... ... a fresh Arch install. The packages are installed to a folder outside of $HOME but right at the root of the system. This means that even if /home gets formatted you'll be able to keep your dot files and any other folders you have stored in /home/username. I run this script when I do a major OS upgrade. This video is part of the following collections Do you want to see some hot shemales in hardcore action? A lusty transgendergirl getting her mouth fucked by a rather horny male. The guy quickly just takes her lips into his mouth, leaving her moaning out of pleasure and turns her over. Now, he stuffs his cock into her pretty mouth and starts eating her out. She continues to blowjob for him, and by the end of the video, he is beating his cock against her throat, taking her breath away. See more hot videos on toppshemales.com.
