Charitable contributions in Canada vary widely from one community to another, according to a new Statistics Canada study. Charitable contributions vary widely across Canada. A new Statistics Canada study found that the charitable giving pattern in the nation's larger cities can be quite different than that of smaller municipalities, with the larger cities often benefiting more from charitable donations. The research, using data from the 2011 Census, shows that Canadians living in the largest Canadian cities are more likely to make charitable gifts to non-profit charities than those in smaller municipalities. The study examined charitable contributions in Canada's 66 largest cities, those with a population of at least 100,000. Meanwhile, those living in municipalities with fewer than 1,000 people were excluded from the study because charitable contributions were too small to be statistically meaningful. Nearly 10.9 million Canadians gave at least one type of contribution during the 2011-12 fiscal year, representing about 8.6 per cent of the population. Individuals gave about $26.7 billion, or $274 per capita.
