Jag ár gÁiteborg stÁngda 2017.Q: Smart keychain wrapper I'm building a NSUserDefaults wrapper that will have a maximum of seven digits, which I want it to be difficult to guess due to the ease of guessing. I am using the default dictionary to store the keys and its default values: NSDictionary* keyDict = [[NSDictionary alloc] initWithObjectsAndKeys: @"one",@"key",@"two",@"key",@"three",@"key",@"four",@"key",@"five",@"key",@"six",@"key",nil]; As the data gets stored, they will be stored as follows: first element key: one value: key second element key: two value: key third element key: three value: key fourth element key: four value: key fifth element key: five value: key sixth element key: six value: key seventh element key: seven value: key Question: I am trying to make the keys seven digits, and I am wondering if there's a way to do that, in which case this is an easy question to answer. A: If you want a 7 character string (it seems you just want to control the number of characters in the key), there's a number of ways to generate these: - (NSString *)stringByPaddingToLength:(NSUInteger)length withString:(NSString *)padStr { if (self.length >= length) { return padStr; } NSRange range = [self rangeOfString:padStr options:NSLiteralSearch]; NSUInteger length2 = range.length; if (length2 == length

L'un des premiers pays avait répondu aux appels de ses électeurs! De 15 heures à minuit, la télévision chinoise s'est tout entière penchée sur le prix de l'événement. Pendant deux heures, les équipes du métro et de la station magique, La Plaine Saint-Denis, ont accueilli les curieux pour célébrer l'expédition numéro un de Plastique! Les deux étoiles de la sélection nationale, Louis Blanc et Guynemer, ont fait leur entrée dans le local de l'hippodrome. Cette découverte est le petit génie en résille de Richard Guilbaud et Antoine Géréo, cet art de faire le sport débridé.
