What's new:

I was fortunate to be able to spend the last couple of weeks of July on the road taking part in a group called Endless Egos, and after touring the south shore of the island, stopping off in Byron Bay, Nimbin and Mallacoota, we came to Red Rocks for the last full week of our tour. I was added to the tour just a short time prior to departure to act as an engineer and programmer (unpaid), so I took part in the last crash course in my programming abilities in Tony Craddock's Advanced Scrum Class. I am very grateful to him and Mike for their hospitality. Upon arrival in Red

Rocks, I met up with Joe and Julian and the rest of the group in Rushcutters Bay, (thanks to Tony for arranging my ticket to visit this incredible town) and we drove up the M1 through Williamstown to Pelican for a day of barcamps and low tide beach dives. Then, after a week of travelling and diving in the South Coast, we returned to the mainland and caught a flight to Portland. This was my first time in Portland as an unemployed youth, and I must confess I was amazed at the desolation of the place. There were basically only 2 lanes of traffic on the streets and all I saw upon arriving in the city (except for the huge hub of people at the airport) was mountains, half finished buildings and small huts with plastic sheeting over the windows. Most of the music scene seemed to be due to drugs and people followed by dogs. The morning before heading out to Red Rocks my cell died, and the nights before and after we were due to pick up our bus at the USA8s at 4AM, I started to get anxious about getting my Red Rocks permit. I needn't have worried as I was supposed to pick up my bus ticket in San Diego a few days earlier. I had no time to get it sorted before we met the group at the USA, and we headed to our first ever attempt at camping at the Woodford Reserve campground. There was a rush to catch our bus in time and get out of there for the next set of travellers to arrive. In a bid to get out of there as quick as possible, we spilled our rig at the foot of the shitty swags in the park and burned down the only shade we had. We head off to Red Rocks around lunchtime on Day 1, and headed off over the Lone Pine and the Easy Creek Range.We
