I've been a big fan of the Kenneth Clark documentary series The Mind of Man, in which he explores the inner worlds of notable figures including Henry James, Virginia Woolf, HG Wells, Lincoln, St Augustine and Francis Bacon. I'm a big fan of his book Civilisation, and have been for many years. I also enjoy the activities of the Institute of Museum and Library Services' National Leadership by the Numbers project, and the following facts were fun to assemble: There are about 60,000 manic depressive disorders in the US. Although many people with bipolar disorder keep their illness under control, many do suffer from severe periods of depression, and I am impressed by the fact that we are talking about suicide in this context. I've been trying to find out more about bipolar disorder recently, and I was interested to see this study
