Rom, 3:25, 29. 6057 Strong, Light-driven conversion of C6 fullerene as the biomarker for electrochemical detection of antibiotics. Nanomaterial-based electrochemical biosensor can directly detect biomolecules owing to its merits of high sensitivity, low cost and easy to operate, although it is susceptible to interference from small amount of biomolecules. Therefore, to achieve high sensitivity biosensor, some method must be found to remove the interfering signals. Here, we employ C6 fullerene as biomarker to specifically detect antibiotics. Nanomaterial-based electrochemical biosensor is constructed with thionine functionalized carbon quantum dots modified glassy carbon electrode (CQDs/GCE) to successfully detect bacterial growth, and can also specifically detect target antibiotics by the characteristic of light-driven conversion of C6 fullerene. The interferences from oleic acid and dopamine can be effectively removed by the nanomaterials, and the DNA sequences can be examined by our system to realize simultaneous detection of antibiotic and DNA. Compared with the biosensor without C6 fullerene, this method has a high sensitivity, and has a low detection limit as low as 5 ng mL⁻¹ (30 nM) and a high selectivity.[Perturbation of the immune system in patients with diabetes mellitus]. The manifestations of the disturbances in the cellular and humoral immune response of patients with diabetes mellitus are discussed. The disturbances in the cellular immune response can be divided into two groups: the increase in the number and reactivity of T-lymphocytes and the alteration in the functional activity of these cells. In the humoral immune response decrease in the number of the L-cells, increase in B-cell number and functional activity, and decrease in the response to T-cell determinants and T-dependent polysaccharides are observed. Interrelations between disturbances in the cellular and humoral immune response are discussed.[Analysis of genetic polymorphism of chromosome 11 in gastric carcinoma]. To study the gene polymorphisms of chromosome 11 in gastric carcinoma and to elucidate the possibility of genetic polymorphism of this chromosome in gastric carcinoma. The gene polymorphism of chromosome 11 was analyzed by conventional and denaturing gradient gel electrophoresis (DGGE)

David Arpin's Fundraising Recipe: Making that Good Food, for Good Causes There's no question about the health benefits of eating right, but in today's world, it takes more than a bowl of healthy fruits and vegetables to start feeling the benefits. To learn how to make fundraising a little easier, David Arpin, a caterer for the last 30 years, shares his recipe for success with Hometown Heroes: Start with your offer. "As a chef, you're going to prepare, and you're going to sell food," says Arpin. "People will make those decisions based on what is in the food." A restaurant is a pretty safe place to provide the food — there's a chef, there are the interiors, the front-of-the-house, the entertainment, etc. What if you're not operating under those conditions? "You need to have clearly defined objectives," says Arpin. Think about your marketing message. "Make sure it's something they would want to sell," says Arpin. "Don't
