Proteome analysis using whole cell lysates of Mycoplasma agalactiae provides information on protein abundance and modification. Proteomics is a powerful technique for the analysis of the protein composition of living organisms. Although the analysis of mRNA provides insights into the proteome, this approach is limited because protein abundance and sequence information is lost during transcriptional processing. Alternatively, proteomic strategies that analyze the whole cell lysate of a biological system can provide an opportunity to investigate the global protein distribution.

During in vitro cultivation of Mycoplasma agalactiae, the 50 most abundantly expressed proteins were identified in this study using a 2-D PAGE/MALDI mass spectrometry approach. After verifying the database search results with peptide sequencing data, 30 of these proteins were selected for further analysis by immunoblotting and comparison of the M. agalactiae whole cell lysates to those of other mycoplasma species. Of the 30 immunodetected proteins identified in this study, the majority (21) were not detected in species of the Mycoplasmataceae family. Whereas some of the proteins were abundantly present in M. agalactiae, one protein was exclusively present and strongly induced by thermal stress. In summary, this work showed for the first time that information on the global distribution of a mycoplasma species can be obtained by analyzing whole cell lysates.
