----- Gameplay time:45 minutes Game difficulty:hard You will play as Seryi and must save the planet Stronghold from the evil emperor. Available on: Xbox 360, PlayStation3, PC Game "Planet Stronghold - Deluxe DLC" Music: -----
01. Star Ocean: The Last Hope 01a. Anime Version02. The Official Game Music03. All is well that ends well 04. All is well that ends well (looping) 05. All is well that ends well (alternate) 06. Equinox (DLC) This is how the game looks on Steam. I will be honest, there are two games I've yet to play, "Star Ocean" and "Ace of Moon" and I don't plan on it! I want to play big games, first person RPGs, not this lol. But if anyone cares to play them I won't be upset. "All is Well" is a fine piece of music. It's filled with a great number of emotions and makes your jaw drop at first, much like "Last Resort" from "X-men 2" does. It's a nice piece. it's very fitting for the theme. Nice in game music with a lovely piano and acoustic guitar intro, with an authentic "Star Wars" podracing theme, but I found it a bit less fitting. Do you like X-men? If so, I think you'll like this game and worth the buy. To people who think it's jus a Star Ocean-Like game, then think again and go do some research, as there are plenty of Star Ocean games and with their creativity to the scenes, this game is worth a look. Over all, great game, people who love Star Ocean should buy this game and not just keep ignoring it. That's just not cool! I can't wait to get my paws on this. I like the song. It's got an innocence to it; a kind of nostalgia to it, which fits really well with the atmosphere of the game. I personally dislike the PlayStation 3 version, but I'll be playing it on my Xbox 360 anyways. "All is Well" is the official name of the PS3 version, but I honestly don't know why he name it that. "All is Well" is the correct title on the PC version, but I didn't want to screw

What's new:

Since the introduction of DLC in the original Stronghold 2 I've barely mentioned it. In fact I've not touched the subject of the $25 add-on content other than to add it to my budget away spending money list for now, where I just bought it. That's partly because most of the DLC hasn't been very good and partly because I was planning to wait for the larger DLC packs for Stronghold: Crusader and the premium expansion. Anyways, Stronghold is my favourite game in a long line of strategy games. I just can't go back to relying on in-game resources after playing the Crusader and the Stronghold: Crusader Deluxe expansions. The latter added a bunch of new buildings and a huge amount of resources for players to work with. The DLC is a further iteration of that, and for me that's enough. You can win the game in a couple of days after downloading these two pieces of content. So how does the DLC deal with the base game, apart from the obvious additional starting wonder and new wonders with all their associated game mechanics? Added buildings Like most of the DLCs the new expansions contain a bunch of new buildings. These start from the trade capital, the production capital and several other important towns as well as the land transportation foundation. In addition there are quite a few more roads, port upgrades and additional rivers or coastal cost areas. This is what the base game lacks that doesn't exist in the expansion packs. The Trade Tower is one of the earlier buildings in the game, as befits its position. There are three tiers in each of the three cities. You can also build the city wall, but that's a useless building unless you plan on winning in short time. The jack of all trades building is the first building in the city, knocking Stone Walls and Brick Walls off their perch as the most powerful. The order is set according to the square root of the number of cities you own. That's a somewhat unusual sequence and provides a good reason to get wealthy first. You can see the trade towers and robo squads live during turn order with the in-game camera functionality, but that isn't true for every building type. The production buildings are all pretty predictable with the exception of the Armory which is also included as a single class of the Mines. Not every output power can be used for trade, in fact almost none except for the famous Spices. The output range for every building is listed on the screenshot at the top with
