You can also consider putting try-catch all over your code, and see if there are any better solutions for you. A number of methods for the treatment of unwanted deposits of solid matter on surface of water, such as the filter beds of sewage treatment works, power stations, cooling towers, industrial waters and other waters that are drawn off from various industrial processes, have become known. Particularly in the water treatment industry, the problem of removing scale forming substances from effluent waters, such as cooling water, condensate, distillery liquor, boiler water and the like, is of particular interest. A general method for treating scale forming deposits in water is by flocculation, which is normally effected by subjecting the solids to a shearing force in a flocculating device of some kind. A more specific method is the so-called "reverse flocculation" method in which the solids are treated in a flocculating chamber which has a plurality of nozzles located beneath the flocculating chamber, in which jets of air are directed into the water. The air bubbles formed, emerge through the nozzles, and dissolve in the water. When the air bubbles increase in size, they form bubbles which coalesce with other bubbles, thereby forming the flocs (small scale particles), which can subsequently be removed, for example, from a flocculation chamber. In WO 96/27248, there is described a flocculation device of the "reverse flocculation" type, in which

In one aspect, the present invention relates to a cooling system for an electric motor of a motor vehicle having an internal combustion engine and an electric machine. The cooling system includes a water circuit including a compressor, a cooling tank, a cold water line, and a cold water line. Air is allowed to flow through the water circuit and the water circuit has a temperature controller that permits the temperature of the water circuit to vary. In one aspect, the present invention relates to a method of cooling an electric machine of a motor vehicle. The method includes the steps of providing a water circuit, providing a cold water line in the water circuit, providing a cooling tank in the water circuit, providing a compressor in the water circuit, and allowing air to flow through the water circuit. In one aspect, the present invention relates to a motor vehicle having an internal combustion engine and an electric machine. The motor vehicle also includes a cooling system that includes a water circuit that includes a compressor, a cooling tank, and a cold water line. A cold water line allows water to flow through the cooling tank. In one aspect, the present invention relates to a cooling system for an electric motor of a motor vehicle having an internal combustion engine and an electric machine. The cooling system includes a water circuit including a compressor, a cooling tank, a cold water line, and a cold water line. Various embodiments of the present invention provide important technical advantages. One such advantage is that an electric machine can be cooled in a simple manner. The electric machine is cooled by a water circuit that has a continuous water flow, such as the cold water circuit described above. In one embodiment of the present invention, the water circuit does not have to be pressurized. Rather, air is allowed to flow through the water circuit and the temperature
