Adobe Photoshop has both a 5-minute Timelapse function and a 30-minute Repeat function. The big difference between them is that the 30-minute Timelapse section will process your images on demand. The Repeat function will process on a time-based schedule. For example, for a repeating series of 30-minute Timelapses, you would set Photoshop to Process all images every 30 minutes. The Repeat function has a slider that lets you turn on Repeat effects without repeating processing. Adobe Photoshop Lightroom Classic CC is a free version of Lightroom 5. It's automatic, but can be modified and tweaked manually to blend properly with your content. If you're looking for more advanced techniques to enrich your images, Gradient Map could do the trick. In addition to the normal selection tools, you can also apply one or more of Photoshop's selection-based image adjustments, including Hue/Saturation, Exposure, Lightness, and Selective Color. You can also increase or decrease the entire image's color balance. You can even bring out a previously hidden object. In most images, the background can look distracting, even when it isn't. The backgrounds in your pictures can be removed with the Shading/Masking tool. This can take away the limitations of the traditional layer method - enabling you to easily remove the background from an image and apply other adjustments to that layer. For example, you can apply filters, brightness and contrast adjustments, or change the opacity for that layer. Simple tools such as Font Panel and Layers Panel are used in virtually every project. For example, you can use them to adjust text's style, text size, type style (e.g., bold, italic, underline), and case style (e.g., upper/lowercase, all caps). As you normalize your text within the Type panel, you can set text wrap you'd like, use hyphens, and change text color.

Adobe Photoshop's content-aware fill (CA) and content-aware selection (CLC) are tools that use the database of pre-loaded content (a list of all of the content that appears in the photo) to reduce image fixing and clean up blemishes and defects. However, these tools can't do this without false positives and false negatives, so powerful editing like removing wrinkles, scanning defects from the skin, or filling in fur must be done by hand with content-aware tools. The new Content-Aware tools are part of the Photoshop App for the web and Adobe Sensei, and when Selection area is selected, the CLC will find the similar part or the adjacent part content and then insert or delete the content in the image without losing the original picture. This is a very useful tool for content creators like the ones in the photo retouch industry. The smart file command now has tools that make it easier to create cross-style file naming. File commands are simple commands, and these include commands like Open, New, Duplicate and Rename. These commands allow you to name your file with different symbols of the day, month or year. For example, you can easily use "mm/dd/yyyy" to create the same file name on the same day every month. When someone fills in the canvas, the filled area is automatically filled with a color of the users' professional color palette. Local users can choose their own colors from the color library. All users can choose a basic color for the placeholder. There is also a new feature called "Save as Photoshop document." If you share a document as a Photoshop file between the desktop apps and the web apps, you can easily share it and access it later.
