After years of working in the field of photography and digital imaging, I no longer consider myself an expert. I'm a regular, everyday consumer who relies on paid professionals to help me do the best I can do. Luckily, Adobe Photoshop CC proves to be thoroughly industry-leading at the time of this evaluation, and the convenience of its user interface makes me want to push my limits even further. All of these qualities make it a true autofocus in the photo editing arena. Adobe Photoshop is an enormously powerful and feature-packed design tool that remains a favorite amongst all its competitors. As a serious artist (commercial and freelance), it allows me to create brilliantly accessible pieces of artwork that meet industry standards (where in-depth and extensive Photoshopping is required, of course)--all without spending hours in front of the computer. I'm a proud On1 customer, and I really recommend it. More importantly, the team has done an excellent job of maintaining software that consistently and consistently adds to the quality of everyone's professional artwork and the company as a whole. All of my current projects are well crafted with the help of this amazing app. If the industry landscape moves on from Adobe's dominance and new regulations from the EU force companies to actually invest more time and resources in projects, artists will have to look elsewhere. The reality of the world we live in doesn't really favor one program over another given the benefits of working with a variety of different programs can be quite diverse.

Oils have many specular highlights or surface reflections that are created by an interaction between the light source and the surface. These reflections are akin to having a perfect mirror on the picture to reflect all the incident light, and the other side of the mirror has no reflection.
