The same thing applies to all kinds of drugs, from amphetamines to Xanax to cocaine, to codeine to morphine to heroin. No, and the same applies to all kinds of drugs, from amphetamines to Xanax to cocaine to codeine to morphine to heroin. You've got a point there. Most of the rest is just propaganda trying to demonize anything seen as a possible threat to their own business model. That's a great point, depending on how you define "overdose". If you say that it means a person dying because of a toxidrome, then the point is that we need to take care of addicts for their sake, not ban all of them. If you define "overdose" as "death", that's going to result in a number of people dying unnecessarily, possibly very severely, because we will need to do a better job of monitoring them. I think the definition of overdose is a bit different from the others. Overdose is basically when you reach a point where the drug takes over your body and actually kills you even if it's not the intent. Heroin addict's can also die because the lack of treatment or awareness. You've got a point there. Most of the rest is just propaganda trying to demonize anything seen as a possible threat to their own business model. That's a great point, depending on how you define "overdose".
